GASOLINE SHORE FISHING BOATS.

Evidence that motive power other than sails is gaining favor for fishing craft may be found among the fleet of small shore boats that daily leave our harbor for quick trips. Gradually the small fishing steamer has come into play, and there is a prospect that the gasoline engine will completely revolutionize this branch of the fishing industry. The small steamer has proven very satisfactory, and it is claimed that the advantages that are derived by its use make but little room for comparison with the sail boat. The expense to run the steamer is said to be small and trips are made without delay. Many of these boats have now been brought into active business, and thus far, according to reports, they are proving profitable investments. They are a success it seems, during the summer, spring and fall, but their practicability in the winter time remains for the future to prove. However, it is claimed that the gasoline boat can follow the business in the most profitable seasons.
